ian who has stored away in he for "something nice to do." When there is a party of quick-witted folks the game friends of "telegrams" is usually great fun. Pencils and paper are provided and ten letters of the alphabet are selected at random, each contestant selecting one. These are set down at the head of each sheet. Some special object is then selected, time is called | summer. and each contestant puts his wits to work on a telegram suggestive of the situation. Each of the ten words allowed must begin with the letters at the head of the sheet For instance, at a jolly home party one afternoon the subject selected was a party of Chicago financiers who had come to see about investing in Arizona mines, but found themselves storm-stayed by a most inrequent and unreasonable shower. The etters given were b, r, e, n, a, o, l, i, t, m. The time limit was five minutes. Among the telegrams elicited were these: Bring rain coats enough. No an oilskin

The notable thing about them is that in every case the ladies are well born and would indignantly repel any insinuation that they were not also well ored. Less flagrant cases are noticed every day, where grown-ups, as Elizabeth says, "sit anyway in their chairs" and do other things that they would surely reprimand their children for imitating. Every few days a fresh object lesson is furnished. One of the most recent is that afforded by the Chronicle, which has introduced an oil plant for generating steam in its boilers. The result has been to do away with the black smoke and soot which poured in great volume from its chimney when soft coal was used.
